

Bibliographic Notes

by Jennifer L. Hehman, editor

Finding art-related journals online used to be limited to what you could find in the standard art indexes' online versions, i.e. WilsonWeb and CSA. But other general online journal aggregators, i.e. EbscoHost and Gale, have ventured into the arts fields and now provide some full text online access to a potpourri of art titles. These online vendors may be available at your public library or college library. At my institution, the state has a grant to provide online access to the EbscoHost product to all public, school and academic libraries in Indiana.

Be aware that these vendors' definition of "full text" for a journal may mean that at least one article per issue of a journal may be available in "full text" while the rest of the articles for that issue are only abstracts or citations. If the full text is in PDF, it may include plates as well. I have learned to check an actual print issue with what is actually provided by the online aggregators. So do not use this listing as a reason to cancel any print subscriptions, but as an added source to check if you have lost an article from a journal issue or a student needs access to historic art journals your library does not own in print. Some online vendors limit access to their full text to their print subscribers too, such as Blackwell's Ingenta or require users to register for access, as Oxford University Press online. Some of these vendors also have "embargos," delays of months so that for the most recent issues of a particular journal, one must still subscribe to print or wait for the online versions to be made available.

JSTOR has put online truly full text for back runs of archaeology, art, and classics journals from volume 1, number 1 to a "moving wall" which varies by title. More art journals are being added in the coming year. This project provides large back runs of journals that most of our libraries do not have space, budgets or conservation staff to maintain in print. Sometimes, Project Muse fills the gap by providing access to the years from the JSTOR "moving wall" to the most current issue for those titles. Sometimes, the general aggregators cover the more recent issues. It is a crazy quilt of gaps and overlaps to find all issues of some journals. To get a handle on this situation, I have compiled a selective inventory.

This is an inventory of art related e-journals found in several online vendors--outside the usual art indexers-- which you may want to know about.
