Six issues of ARLIS/NA Reviews were published with a total of 68 reviews for the year (four assigned reviews were not received). Reviewers included members and nonmembers from the United States and Canada.

The editors did not make any major changes to guidelines, formatting, or editorial style, but a new review submittal form was implemented, in part to help with the frequent problem of receiving reviews that are in excess of the 450 word limit.

Doug Litts resigned as co-editor of the Reviews after accepting nomination and election to the ARLIS/NA Executive Board as treasurer. A call for applications resulted in seven submissions, and a sub-group of the editorial board, consisting of Terrie Wilson, Roger Lawson, Judy Dyki, and Eileen Markson, reviewed the applications. Four phone interviews were conducted. Amy Trendler, architecture librarian at Ball State University, was selected as the new co-editor. The transition occurred at the end of the calendar year 2017.

The editors maintain a working relationship with about 75 publishers from the United States, Canada, and internationally. The editors are also periodically contacted by both publishers and authors for consideration of material for review. ARLIS/NA members also suggest titles for review on occasion. The editors received 520 books for consideration for review.

The editors manage all routine publishing of new editions, but the front page banner is managed by the central office.